

Jeb Hensarling

ElectionWatch 2022

Jeb Hensarling serves as a Managing Director and Executive Vice Chairman of UBS Americas. In this role he works with the firm's senior leadership and most important clients to better evaluate political risks and how public policy impacts their business interests and investment portfolios.

Prior to joining UBS in 2019, he served in the US Congress for eight terms, including three terms as Chairman of the powerful House Financial Services Committee, which exercises jurisdiction over a broad swath of the nation's economy including banking, securities, insurance, housing and monetary policy. As Chairman, Hensarling shepherded over 80 bills into law including the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act, widely recognized as the most pro-growth banking bill in a generation, as well as the JOBS 2.0 legislation, which helps startups and early growth companies access capital. During his tenure, the Wall Street Journal referred to Hensarling as "[the driver] of economic policy in the House."

In recognition of his economic policy expertise, Hensarling was also appointed to serve on the Congressional Oversight Panel for TARP, the $700 billion troubled asset purchase program set up in wake of the 2008 financial crisis.

Prior to serving in Congress, Hensarling had a varied career in business. He served as an officer of both Maverick Capital, a well-known hedge fund, and Green Mountain Energy, one of the nation's leading retailers of renewable energy. Additionally, Hensarling spent several years practicing both corporate and real estate law.

Hensarling earned a B.A. in economics from Texas A&M University and a J.D. from the University of Texas. Hensarling serves on the Board of Directors of SIFMA, the nation's leading trade association for the securities industry. Jeb also serves on the board of Cox Media Group. He resides in Dallas with his wife and children.
