

UBS Responsible Supply Chain Standard

UBS regards sustainable development as a fundamental aspect of sound business management. UBS strives to adhere to high ethical standards in all decisions UBS makes and when UBS interacts with its stakeholders. UBS expects the same from its suppliers.

Recognizing that there are different legal competitive and cultural environments in which UBS's suppliers operate throughout the world, the UBS Responsible Supply Chain Standard serves as a benchmark for assessing ethical business practices of UBS's suppliers and will be referenced within contractual agreements between UBS and its suppliers.

Where gaps are identified between supplier practices and the UBS Responsible Supply Chain Standard, suppliers shall improve their practices in order to comply with the UBS Responsible Supply Chain Standard whilst meeting all other operating and engagement criteria.

The UBS Responsible Supply Chain Standard incorporates standards on human rights, labor rights and environmental and anti-corruption principles as set out in the UN Global Compact – which is derived from the Universal Declaration on Human Rights, the International Labour Organization's Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and the United Nations Convention against Corruption. It supports the implementation of the principles stated in the UBS Environmental & Human Rights Policy.
