The new valuables

Investors’ purpose now: putting capital behind experiences, relationships, and helping others.
A century after the Spanish flu and World War I led to the “Roaring Twenties,” many pundits are forecasting a similar post-COVID environment. While that could happen eventually, our latest Investor Watch research shows that—for now—investors are focused on something deeper: a search for meaning, a sense of purpose and a desire to contribute more to the world around them.
One year ago, in May 2020, UBS Investor Watch surveyed investors as the first wave of the pandemic was ebbing. In our report, “Setting a new course,” we found that investors were fearful, uncertain and reassessing what was most important to them.

Now, with vaccinations accelerating, commerce recovering and restrictions loosening, we continue to see a reprioritizing of goals—and a more acute sense that life is short.

But rather than indiscriminate spending and frenzied celebrations, the hallmarks of this post-pandemic recovery will likely be more measured—and more meaningful.

To be sure, many investors intend to make up for lost time, led by those in Asia. Nearly six in 10 investors want to indulge in the things they missed while in isolation, with travel and entertainment topping the list of planned expenditures.

But something else is going on.

Seven in 10 investors want to make more of a difference in the world. Six in 10 report that the pandemic made them more spiritual. Forty percent say they want to be part of something bigger than themselves.

Digging deeper, we found that women and younger investors were most affected by the pandemic. Women were more likely than men, for example, to reassess their priorities. And by a huge margin, younger investors value making a difference in the world (79% vs. 51% of investors over age 50).

With this new perspective, investors are more interested in using their capital to effect change. Nearly half plan to increase charitable giving from their pre-pandemic levels, led by Latin America. And almost 60% are more interested in investing sustainably than they were before the pandemic.

As a global recovery continues to advance, look not just for hotels and stadiums to fill up, but hearts and minds too.
Pandemic transformed investors’ views on life

The pandemic changed investors in fundamental ways. Not only did the experience spur most investors to reexamine their priorities, it triggered a search for meaning in both life and work.

In their personal lives, 68% say the pandemic made them want to find their purpose and make more of a difference in the world. On the professional side, four in 10 want to find more meaningful work or retire altogether to enjoy life.

Most investors are eager to make up for lost time

The pandemic is accelerating investor attitudes that first took shape last year—focusing on health and protecting family. Now, investors are putting even greater value on time. A full 82% of investors say life is short, up noticeably from May 2020.

Six in 10 investors (57%)—led by those in Asia and Switzerland—plan to catch up on activities they missed while in isolation. Investors in Latin America and the US are more cautious.

With new perspective, investors look to help others …

Emerging from the pandemic with their wealth largely intact, investors feel appreciative of what they have—but two thirds feel guilty about their prosperity. Perhaps it’s not surprising, then, that almost half of investors (45%) expect to increase their charitable giving from pre-pandemic levels, while 38% will maintain it.

As life normalizes, most investors plan to spend even more than they did before COVID-19 …

Prolonged limitations on everything from dining to commuting dramatically reduced discretionary spending. Seven in 10 investors (72%) were able to save more as a result.

Now, half of investors plan to spend even more than they did before the pandemic. A quarter will return to their pre-pandemic spending levels. Only 25% intend to spend less than they did before.

Generational spotlight

A generational divide has emerged from the pandemic

The pandemic changed the mindset of younger investors far more than that of older investors. For example, about 80% of younger investors want to make a difference in the world, compared to only half of investors over age 50. Moving forward, 52% of younger investors intend to increase their charitable giving from pre-pandemic levels, compared to 35% of older investors.

Sustainable investing strategies aim to incorporate environmental, social and governance (ESG) considerations into investment process and portfolio construction. Strategies across geographical and styles approach ESG analysis and incorporate the findings in a variety of ways. The returns on portfolios consisting primarily of sustainable investments may be lower or higher than portfolios where ESG factors, exclusions or other sustainability issues are not considered, and the investment opportunities available to such portfolios may also differ.

About the survey: UBS Global Wealth Management provides financial advice and solutions to wealthy, institutional and corporate clients worldwide. As part of our leading research capabilities, we survey global investors on a regular basis to keep a pulse on their needs, goals and concerns. Since 2012, UBS Investor Watch tracks, analyzes and reports the sentiment of high net worth investors.

UBS Investor Watch surveys cover a variety of topics, including:
- Overall financial sentiment
- Economic outlook and concerns
- Personal goals and concerns
- Key topics, like aging and retirement

For this edition of UBS Investor Watch, we surveyed 3,800 investors with at least $1 million in investable assets. The global sample was split across 15 markets: Argentina, Brazil, mainland China, France, Germany, Hong Kong, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Russia, Singapore, Switzerland, the UAE, the UK and the US. The research was conducted in May 2021. Findings were compared to a study conducted in May of 2020 among more than 3,750 investors with similar asset levels and age groups.
