CIO Livestream: Analyzing the Trump Administration's Impact on Latin America

21 February 2025, 4:10 pm EST, written by US Editorial Team UBS Editorial Team

What does President Trump's legacy mean for Latin America? Is your client's investment strategy prepared for what comes next?

On Wednesday, 26 February, a CIO Livestream will provide an analysis of how key policy decisions from the Trump era could continue to reshape Latin America's economic and political landscape. This event will feature leading UBS experts sharing valuable insights on the evolving dynamics of trade, foreign investment, and migration. The discussion will focus on how these shifts are likely to influence Latin America's economic outlook in 2025 and beyond.

Featured speakers:

Alejo Czerwonko – Chief Investment Officer, Emerging Markets Americas, UBS

Gabriela Soní – Chief Investment Officer, UBS Mexico

Alberto Rojas – Senior Emerging Markets Strategist, UBS

Key topics of discussion:

Tariffs and Trade Policy: Examining the evolving relationship between the US and Latin America

Foreign Investment: Assessing how US policy influences capital flows across the region

Migration Policy: Analyzing the broader regional effects of recent policy changes

Economic Forecast: Projecting Latin America's economic outlook through 2025 and beyond

Together, they will examine the impact of key economic and political decisions from the Trump administration on Latin America and what these shifts could mean for the region's future.
